Those representatives were invited to set their own agenda for the meeting with the Review Team and provide any materials to the Review Team.

Australia also undertook the following actions to facilitate civil society involvement:

- Regular meetings with civil society representatives — In the lead-up to the review, and throughout the development of Australia’s Self-Assessment Report, Australian Government representatives met regularly with Transparency International (Australia) to ensure that civil society’s input was used in the development of the Self-Assessment Report and the final report.

- Public consultation — Australia invited members of the public and civil society to make submissions to the UNCAC Self-Assessment Report through a dedicated consultation webpage on the Attorney-General’s Department website.

Submissions were asked to focus on Chapters III and IV of UNCAC and the input received was used to inform the Self-Assessment Report. Public submissions were also provided to the Review Team to assist the Desk Review. Under a Memorandum of Understanding on International Cooperation to Combat Corruption, the Australian Attorney-General’s Department, Australian Commission for Law Enforcement Integrity and Australian Public Service Commission have partnered with Indonesia’s Corruption Eradication Commission to strengthen Indonesia’s ability to recover the proceeds of corruption.

The Attorney-General’s Department, together with the Australian Transaction Reports and Analysis Centre (AUSTRAC), is delivering a program to assist Papua New Guinea meet its FATF action plan and to combat corruption. Australia is providing assistance in progressing law reform on proceeds of crime and counter-financing of terrorism and practical guidance on proceeds of crime cases. In addition, the Attorney-General’s Department has deployed advisors in key Papua New Guinea law and justice agencies under Australia’s Strongim Gavman Program, who contribute to anti-corruption work. This includes:

- advisor support to the Office of the Solicitor General and Office of the State Solicitor, focused on improving legal services to the State

- building the PNG Government’s legal policy capability to develop anti-money laundering and anti-corruption legislation, including guiding the development of policy and legislation to support the creation of a PNG Independent Commission Against Corruption.

Australia also supports anti-corruption technical assistance through financial contributions. In particular, Australia supports the operation of the UN Convention against Corruption, by supporting UNODC and the UN Development Programme (UNDP) to help countries sign up, implement and review compliance with the Convention. This includes technical and capacity building assistance to support countries to develop policies, laws and institutional frameworks to advance the effective implementation of UNCAC. Australia has made the following financial contributions to support this work:

BRIBERY

YES ☒ NO ☐
10. Has your country criminalized the domestic solicitation or acceptance of bribes (passive bribery)?

YES ☒ NO ☐

11. If no, is your country taking steps to criminalize active and/or passive bribery?

YES ☐ NO ☐

If yes, please provide details.
Not applicable. See above

12. Has your country instituted measures to discourage the solicitation of bribes?

YES ☒ NO ☐

If yes, please provide details.

Australia has ratified the United Nations Convention against Corruption. Under the UNCAC, States Parties are required to prohibit their officials from seeking or receiving bribes.

The obligation is implemented in Part 7.6 of the Criminal Code 1995 (Cth). Under these provisions, a Commonwealth public official is guilty of an offence if the official dishonestly asks for a benefit for himself, herself or another person (sections 141 and 142).

State and Territory laws criminalise corruptly giving or offering an inducement or reward to an agent for doing or not doing something in relation to the affairs of the agent’s principal. Persons who aid, abet, counsel, procure, solicit or incite the commission of the offences are also guilty of an offence.

Where a foreign public official solicits or accepts an undue advantage, Australia’s laws provide for sharing of evidence about the conduct of the official with their government with a view to the official being prosecuted under their domestic laws.

The Corporations Act 2001 (Cth) also creates offences that may also apply to the solicitation of bribes. Section 184 of the Act which makes it an offence for a director, other officer or employee of a company to use their position dishonestly.

13. Does your country provide support for/work with business in resisting solicitation?

YES ☒ NO ☐
Australia actively encourages businesses to adopt good governance practices to help business resist bribe solicitation and extortion, through outreach activities and resources provided for businesses.

A range of Australian agencies provide outreach to the private sector, including the Attorney-General’s Department, Australian Federal Police, AUSTRADE and the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade. These activities seek to inform Australian businesses of their responsibilities to conduct activities in accordance with Australian and applicable foreign laws.

Australia also supports and promotes relevant international anti-bribery and anti-corruption frameworks including the APEC Code of Conduct for Business and OECD instruments including the Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises, the Anti-Bribery Convention and the Risk Awareness Tool. Australia promotes the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprise, and the advice it provides on combating bribery, bribe solicitation and extortion.

Each year the Australian Government, through the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, conducts outreach to the private sector, including businesses and individuals, as well as to universities, on Australian extra-territorial offences, including foreign bribery and corruption. This outreach takes the form of biannual visits to state and territory capitals to provide businesses with training on their obligations under domestic legislation and to discuss key risks in international business transactions, including the provision of ‘facilitation payments’.

14. Has your country instituted measures to discourage facilitation payments?

YES ☒ NO ☐

If yes, please provide details.

Through outreach activity and resources available for businesses, Australian agencies seek to raise awareness of the distinction between bribes and facilitation payments, and to encourage companies to prohibit or discourage the use of facilitation payments.

This approach is in line with our obligations under the OECD Convention on Combating Bribery of Foreign Public Officials in International Business Transactions and the United Nations Convention against Corruption.

Australia has a comprehensive regime for identifying, locating, restraining and forfeiting property that is suspected to be proceeds of crime (including proceeds of corruption). Under the Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters Act 1987 (the MA Act) Australia can register both conviction-based and non-conviction-based foreign proceeds of crime orders. In response to a request for mutual legal assistance Australia can also use investigative powers—including search warrants, productions orders, monitoring orders and notices issued to financial institutions—to produce records and provide information relevant to foreign asset recovery proceedings. Australia can also take action to temporarily restrain assets pending receipt of a foreign order to be registered in Australia.

Under the Proceeds of Crime Act 2002 Australia can also take domestic action to restrain and confiscate assets in connection with a foreign indictable offence. Under the Proceeds of Crime Act a foreign indictable offence means an offence which, if the conduct had occurred in Australia, would constitute an offence punishable by at least 12 months imprisonment.

The Corporations Act makes provision for tracing the beneficial ownership of interests in a company by means of sending a notice to the legal owner to provide details of their own beneficial interests in the company and full details of any other person who has a beneficial interest in the shares or interest held by the legal owner. Tracing notices may be issued by the company or the Australian Securities and Investments Commission.

Partnerships are regulated at a State rather than Federal level.

On 15 January 2014 the new scheme under the Public Interest Disclosure Act 2013 (PID Act) came into force. The PID Act establishes a framework to encourage and facilitate reporting by public officials (includes contracted service providers to government) and former public officials of wrongdoing in the Commonwealth public sector, ensure that Commonwealth agencies properly investigate and respond to public interest disclosures and provide protections to public officials who make qualifying public interest disclosures. The scheme facilitates disclosures being reported to, and investigated, within government. There are also circumstances where disclosures could be made outside government.

Under the PID Act, government agencies are required to develop and implement procedures and appointed authorised officers to facilitate public interest disclosures for public officials that belong to their agency.

The Commonwealth Ombudsman (and the Inspector General for Intelligence and Security [IGIS] in relation to intelligence agencies) oversights and monitors the implementation of the PID scheme, provides assistance, education and awareness raising about the scheme. The Commonwealth Ombudsman (and the IGIS) can also investigate public interest disclosures made public officials (and former public officials) or allocated by agencies. The Commonwealth Ombudsman will be reporting annually to the Minister and Parliament on the operations of the PID Act.

In addition, Australia’s corporate, markets and financial services regulator, the Australian Securities and Investments Commission (ASIC), recently announced that it will establish an Office of the Whistleblower. The Office will monitor the handling of all whistleblower reports, manage staff development and training and handle the relationship with whistleblowers on more complex matters. The Office will build on improvements that ASIC has made to its whistleblower arrangements through the adoption of a centralised monitoring procedure.

Several initiatives, which complement the Bangalore Principles for Judicial Integrity, have been recently undertaken in Australia. As outlined below, initiatives to promote the accountability and independence of the judiciary have been pursued by Government, court administration bodies, and members of judiciary.

Government led initiatives

Under the Australian Constitution, a federal judge may only be removed from office on the grounds of proved misbehaviour or incapacity.

Australia recently developed clear and transparent processes to assist both the Parliament and the Heads of each federal court to manage complaints about judicial officers which are referred to them for consideration. A new complaints scheme applying to federal judicial officers (other than High Court justices) was established by the Courts Legislation Amendment (Judicial Complaints) Act 2012 (the Judicial Complaints Act) and the Judicial Misbehaviour and Incapacity (Parliamentary Commissions) Act 2012 (the Parliamentary Commissions Act).

The Judicial Complaints Act supports a largely non-statutory framework for handling complaints within federal courts and reinforces the role of court heads of jurisdiction in overseeing the early resolution of complaints, particularly where a complaint does not warrant consideration of the removal of a judge from office.

The Parliamentary Commissions Act provides a separate additional mechanism to assist the Parliament if it is called upon to consider seeking the removal of a judge from office under section 72(ii) of the Constitution. A Parliamentary Commission would be established only in the very rare event that an inquiry into the conduct of a judge was required. Together these reforms provide a flexible framework to ensure that complaints about federal judicial officers can be resolved efficiently, transparently, and at the appropriate level.

Court administration body led initiatives

The National Judicial College of Australia, the Australasian Institute of Judicial Administration, the Judicial Commission of New South Wales, and the Judicial College of Victoria provide judicial education and development programs. These bodies are independent of the executive government and determine their own programs and content. The emphasis on judicial training is largely a matter of court practice and the individual judge, without interference from other arms of government.

Examples of National Judicial College of Australia Programs that promote the accountability and independence of the Judiciary include the National Judicial Orientation Program, ‘Dialogues on being a judge’ and Judicial Leadership, which include topics on judicial conduct and ethics.

Judiciary led initiatives

The second edition of the ‘Guide to Judicial Conduct’ was published by the Australasian Institute of Judicial Administration on behalf of the Council of Chief Justices in 2007. The Guide is a comprehensive public statement, prepared by a committee of judges, about issues of independence and impartiality. Many of the statements outlined in this document are consistent with the values outlined in the Bangalore Principles

Other mechanisms

Other important mechanisms for ensuring judicial accountability and independence that are in place in Australian courts include the appeals process, open courts, procedural fairness, the provision by courts of reasons for decisions, and public and media scrutiny.

The Australian Government announced in 2011 that it would undertake a domestic Pilot of the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative (EITI). The Pilot is testing the EITI principles and criteria against Australia’s existing financial and governance arrangements to inform a government decision whether Australia should move to fully implement the EITI. Financial information has been gathered from a sample of Australian government and Australian and multinational companies operating in Australia’s extractives sector and reconciled.

The Pilot commenced in 2011 and Deloitte Touche Tohmatsu was appointed as Administrator (financial reconciler) for the Pilot. Deloitte has completed the collection and reconciliation of material payments and revenues using data from the 2011-12 Financial Year, or adjusted financial reporting periods where required. The Pilot’s 21 member Multi-stakeholder Group (steering committee) is preparing its report to Government. Further information on Australia’s Pilot of the EITI can be found at: http://www.innovation.gov.au/resource/Programs/ExtractiveIndustriesTransparencyInitiative/Pages/default.aspx

Australia is also a donor to the EITI and since 2006 the Australian Government has contributed a total of AUD 18 million towards the Initiative.

51. Does your government have integrity pacts with the business sector?

YES ☐ NO ☒

If yes, please provide details.

52. Has your country taken steps to implement the IMF Good Practices in Fiscal Transparency?

YES ☒ NO ☐

If yes, please provide details.

We have implemented the ‘good practices’ recommended in the IMF Good Practices in Fiscal Transparency, with a review of the following to be conducted as part of a broader forthcoming review announced by the Australian Government – the White Paper on Reform of the Australian Federation:

1.1.1: The structure and functions of government should be clear

1.1.3: The responsibilities of different levels of government and the relationships between them should be clearly specified.
53. Has your country taken steps to implement the OECD Best Practices on Budget Transparency?

YES ☒   NO □

If yes, please provide details.

We have implemented all the ‘best practices’ recommended by the OECD except for the following:

Budget reports

1.1: The Budget

‘The government’s draft budget should be submitted to Parliament far enough in advance to allow Parliament to review it properly. In no case should this be less than three months prior to the start of the fiscal year....’ The Australian Government’s budget is delivered on the second Tuesday in May every year; the financial year ends on 30 June. The budget goes through a rigorous review process involving Senate committee hearings in May/June.

1.2: Pre-budget report (all points) The Australian Government does not issue a pre-budget report.

1.3 Monthly reports

Monthly reports ‘should be released within four weeks of the end of each month’ – The Australian Government is currently issuing monthly reports within six weeks after the end of the month, noting that: –

- Four weeks is an exceptionally tight timeframe for regular monthly publication of full accrual-based information – as far as we can determine no other country does this (those that achieve four weeks provide a lower standard of information, and even then only about half the countries produce any form of monthly information). The private sector does not do it. We can do it at present if all our processes work exactly as intended!
  - Through internal improvements, the Department of Finance has improved to an average of about five weeks after the end of the month and our ultimate goal is to meet the four week target.
  - The timing of each release is also subject to clearance of the report by the Finance Minister’s office, and is therefore subject to other pressing government priorities.
- Our monthly releases do not contain classifications by major expenditure units as recommended by the OECD. The Australian Government produces expenditure reports on two classifications – nature of expenditure (salaries, grants etc) and economic/functional classification. However, where there are major variances from forecast, the relevant agency or agencies will often be mentioned in the commentary.
1.5: Year-end report
The Australian Government issues two end of year reports – the Final Budget Outcome (FBO) report within three months after the end of the financial year and the Whole-of-Government financial statements. The latter report has a high degree of compliance with the OECD’s recommendations – the main exception is expenditure by administrative unit. Because the FBO is produced within three months, it is less compliant with the OECD’s recommendations.

1.6: The pre-election report should contain the same information as the mid-year report. This has been implemented in part. The Australian Government’s mid-year report typically provides more detailed information than the pre-election report because the latter needs to be issued within ten days of the issue of writs (authority) for each federal election.
